JOURNAL OF INTERGENERATIONAL RELATIONSHIPS

The Journal of Intergenerational Relationships is the only international journal focusing exclusively on the intergenerational field from practical, theoretical, and social policy perspectives. This unique global forum features information about the latest research and program development on intergenerational aspects of a range of global social issues and frontier topics in family studies from the United States and countries around the world.

Each issue presents cutting-edge writing on intergenerational topics, divided into sections:

- "Scholarship" — peer-reviewed academic papers dealing with innovative research, intergenerational programming strategies, research and evaluation, policy issues and suggestions for advancing the intergenerational field
- "From the Field" — papers from practitioners, including program profiles, reflections from the field, new programs in the field, a topical forum, and book and media reviews
- "Forum Response" — discussions of diverse, global issues of intergenerational interest

The journal's wide array of scholarship and practice includes:

- New ideas about the growth, development, and impact of intergenerational approaches to social issues, family connections, and new social structures;
- International perspectives on current issues;
- A balance of evaluation, research, policy, and practice-based peer-reviewed articles;
- Standards for practice;
- Multicultural initiatives;
- Intergenerational approaches to community development;
- Examinations of the role of intergenerational relationships in a changing global society;
- The impact of intergenerational initiatives on social policy;
- Book and media reviews;
- Brief program profiles.

The Journal of Intergenerational Relationships encompasses a variety of disciplines: social work, community development, health, psychology, anthropology, sociology, gerontology, child development, family studies, education, political science, social policy, communications, and more.

MANUSCRIPT SUBMISSIONS
